Tips on Event Planning

Try to book your facility a year in advance.

Dates from late September through November and late January through early April are known as "low-demand dates" and booking an event then could get you a better price. Fridays and Sundays are typically lower-priced than Saturday events.

Make sure to take a tour of your chosen facility and ask the management if there are other events occurring that weekend that may cause parking issues for your guests. Find out if there is a noise curfew and exactly how many hours your rental will cover in the facility.

Once your event date is established, begin your catering search (if the chosen facility does not provide or require in-house catering). Ask potential caterers what their services include, from food to china and tablecloths. Don't forget to ask for sample menus and references!
